BEING BILINGUAL IN PUERTO RICO

In Puerto Rico, in spite of long-standing governmental designation of Spanish and English as co-official languages, bilingualism is a concept fraught with conflict.
There are certainly many bilingual individuals, especially in academia, the professions, the tourist industry, and the world of business. However, Puerto Rico is not a bilingual society.

We need to keep in mind the basic differences between individual bilingualism and societal bilingualism.
In the 2000 Census, 82.4% of Puerto Ricans over the age of 18 claimed to speak English “less than very well.” This means that only 17.6% considered that they spoke English “very well.”
In the immediate San Juan metro area, 20-42% of respondents reported speaking English “very well,” but this is not typical of most of the island.
Outside of the San Juan metro area, the great majority of municipalities had only 10-14% of the adults reporting that they spoke English “very well,” and in the mountainous interior of the island, the level was only 0-9%.

In order to understand the language situation of Puerto Rico, it is vital to consider the attitudes of the residents and the effects of the imposition of English back in 1898 when Puerto Rico was taken over by the United States.
THE INVASION OF PORTO RICO—LANDING OF THE ARMY COMMANDED BY GENERAL MILES, AT GUANICA, JULY 25, 1898.
English in PR is positively viewed as:

• useful in the modern globalized world;
• necessary for upward mobility;
• an enhancement of the repertoire of the individual.
English in PR is negatively viewed as:

• a symbol of the island’s rather schizophrenic relationship with the US;
• the potential usurper of Spanish and Puerto Rican culture at the societal level.
This ambivalence towards English has long historical roots which must be kept in mind when teaching English or when discussing the benefits of bilingualism on the island.
PR language policies (1898-present)

1898—Puerto Rico ceded to U.S. under Treaty of Paris—military government and English as medium of instruction at all levels

1900—Foraker Act installs civil administration with governor and commissioner of education appointed by U.S.

1902—Official Languages Act passed—English & Spanish co-official
1917--Jones Act declares Puerto Ricans to be U.S. citizens (although unable to vote for own governor or for U.S. president)

1917-1934--Spanish as medium of instruction in grades 1-8; English as medium of instruction in grades 9-12.

1934-1942--Spanish as medium of instruction in grades 1-2 with English as subject in grades 3-8, Spanish and English with increasing emphasis on English in high school, English as medium of instruction with Spanish as subject.
1945-46--bills proposing Spanish as sole medium of instruction passed by Puerto Rican legislature but vetoed by President Truman.

1947--Puerto Ricans given right to elect own governor

1948--Luis Muñoz Marín elected as governor and appoints Villaronga as Commissioner of Education

1949-pres.--Spanish as medium of instruction at all levels with English as mandatory subject
1991--Official Languages Act revoked and Spanish declared sole official language of Puerto Rico

1992--Official Languages Act reinstated--Spanish and English returned as co-official languages of Puerto Rico
Nationalistic pride is very prominent in Puerto Rico. No matter what their views regarding the appropriate relationship to the United States, Puerto Ricans highly value their local language and culture and do not wish to give it up.

Circular migration

- Constant migratory flow between U.S. and PR
- Thousands of PRs relocate to States for periods of time, learn English, and then return to occupy positions which require using English on a regular basis.
When speakers of one language are in contact with another language, particularly if that other language is spoken by a politically or economically dominant group, it is completely natural for there to be cross-linguistic influences.
Bilinguals often mix elements of one language into another, creating new and innovative forms. Puerto Ricans are known among Hispanics for their tendency to incorporate English into their Spanish.
Word borrowing, code switching, and even the creation of a new variety of English (Puerto Rican English) are definitely taking place in PR.

This is viewed with alarm by many writers, teachers, and intellectuals.

Number of Anglicisms (N=4,452 words)

Lopez Morales (1992)

- Madrid (291)
- Ciudad de México (170)
- San Juan, PR (480)
Code switching is a common part of being bilingual, but even monolinguals code switch when they alternate between casual and formal styles or when they integrate elements of other dialects into their speech.
A number of Puerto Rican poets and writers (both on and off the island) have opted to utilize both Spanish and English in their literary products. Good examples are: Ana Lydia Vega, Rosario Ferré, Luis Rafael Sánchez, Pedro Juan Soto, Pedro Pietri, Tato Laviera, Sandra Esteves, Esmeralda Santiago, Ana Castillo, Jack Agueros, Nicolasa Mohr, etc.
Excerpt from: Velluda: Alliterated y eslembao by Tato Laviera canela browned in deep tan caribbean sweet lips almost sabroso tasted by a cariñoso sentiment, y buena que estás en gusto affection that cries out loud: qué chévere tú eres, como canela brown warrior woman diplomática with her terms.

It would actually be more surprising if there weren’t any English influence upon the Spanish of Puerto Rico, given the many ways in which English makes its presence felt on the island.
Influence of English on PR Spanish

- Anglicisms are most common among doctors, lawyers, engineers, media and least common among teachers.
- People involved in auto mechanics, sports, fashion/beauty, and computer technology are highly prone to using loanwords.
Anglicisms in San Juan press
María Vaquero (1990)

1) Creating a Spanish-looking word based on an English word form instead of its Spanish equivalent, for example, coincidentalmente instead of de forma coincidente.
2) Using Spanish words with English meanings
   e.g., bloques [building blocks] for “street blocks” instead of cuadras
3) Loan translation: translating literally from English into Spanish
e.g., hacer sentido to mean “make sense”
Syntactic influences in PR
Lipski (1996: 358)

- ¿Cómo te gustó la playa? [How did you like the beach?]
- El problema está siendo considerado. [The problem is being considered.]
- Te llamo para atrás. [I’ll call you back.]
- Él sabe cómo hablar inglés. [He knows how to speak English.]
Commonly heard in PR

- La guagua está supuesta llegar a las 11:15. [The bus is supposed to arrive at 11:15.]
- Standard Spanish: Se supone que la guagua llegue a las 11:15.
Amparo Morales (1986, 2001)

- Looked at use of present continuous verb ¿Qué estás haciendo? [What are you doing?] instead of simple present: ¿Qué haces?
- Is this due to the influence of English?
Morales’ conclusions

- Syntactic influences low in frequency
- Found in other Hispanic speech communities
- Sometimes occur where little or no English influence can be documented
- May represent older forms of Spanish
- Not every variation in syntax is automatically due to English
Development of PR English

- Rose Nash (1971) coined term Englañol to describe English spoken by Puerto Ricans in PR
- Englañol has false cognates used in a Spanish manner, loan translations, and spelling pronunciations.
Syntactic characteristics of PRE
Joan Fayer et al. (1998)

- Inverted word order
  e.g., They tell me how important is the bill for them.

- New lexical creations based on English forms
  e.g., There are many urbanizations in Puerto Rico.
• borrowings from Spanish, e.g., I was stuck in the tapón.

• hybrid compounds utilizing English and Spanish words, e.g., Many people were arrested at the drug punto.
Mixed language varieties are quite common and do not imply inferiority. Both standard English and standard Spanish descended from highly hybridized (even creolized) varieties. It is difficult to convince teachers of this reality, since they are entrusted with perpetuating standard language forms.
The ones who suffer the most from negative attitudes toward mixed varieties are return migrant children who were criticized in the States because they didn’t speak standard English and are criticized in Puerto Rico because they don’t speak standard Spanish.
Conclusion

The politics of language is complex in Puerto Rico. There are no easy answers, just layers of nuances that need to be considered in each situation. Advocating bilingualism seems practical but is laden with political baggage.
The worst linguistic mistake that the U.S. government can make is to underestimate the language loyalty of the Puerto Rican people. English-only will not work as a policy in Puerto Rico. Even the most pro-American forces on the island will not support any moves that undermine the continued use of Spanish.
What’s the difference between ENGLISH ONLY and WHITES ONLY?
Perhaps the most difficult aspect of the situation in Puerto Rico is that bilingualism is often feared as a step toward displacing Spanish. Puerto Rican writer Luis Rafael Sanchez has declared: "todo proyecto bilingüe se hace si se reafirma la lengua vernácula". (All bilingual projects will be supported if they reaffirm the native language.)
The greatest contribution that linguists and language teachers can make is to defuse as much as possible the partisan politics related to bilingualism and keep the discussion focused on scientifically-verified findings regarding the personal and societal benefits of being bilingual.
Worldwide Spanish Speaking Population
(by regions in percentages)

- South America: 42.26%
- North America: 34.10%
- Central America: 9.06%
- Europe: 8.95%
- Africa: 0.14%
- Islands: 5.50%
And, of course, we need to make it crystal clear that bilingualism means “two languages.” There is absolutely no reason why Spanish should be displaced or disrespected in the process of learning English.
